The objective/description of the activity	<ol style="list-style-type: none">1. To understand the research and investigative methods used by media in the field of journalism.2. To enable students with the feminist research perspectives in journalism.
Benefit/Key outcome of the event	Feminist media research can trace its origins to the 1970s and the emergence of feminism as a global movement. Today, feminist media scholars investigate media texts, images, representations, organisations, structures and policies in order to illuminate and affect a change in the realities of our social world. Feminist media research can be, and has been at significant points in history, a form of media activism that motivates social and political movements. The guest lecture delivered was based on the various experiences of the speaker in the field of investigative journalism and an insight to her perspective in terms of political and social issues within Goa and challenges that women face in the field of journalism.
